The governor-general requested that all those in common dress come up and shake hands, which they did. Lord Stanley and party went west to-day.

There is great indignation expressed against the federal, provincial and civic authorities for the criminal neglect of duty which permitted the recent catastrophe of last week at Quebec to occur. The grass in the country around Island lake had made a very poor crop this season owing to the weather, and having been burned off in the spring. In many places around Beaver lake the flowering of the water has left large numbers of fish in shallow pools where they can be easily caught now and where they will freeze in the winter. In a number of places about the trail fires are still smouldering notwithstanding the recent wet weather.

The Calgary Herald denies that potatoes were frozen along the line from Winnipeg to Calgary during the past summer and says that "the disease is not one part of the country any good to cry down another portion of it." This from such source is particularly rich in assurance. If the Herald and its constituents had practised the precept which it here lays down and they would be much better off to-day than they are.

EDMONTON BULLETIN, SEPT. 28, 1899

BEHRING'S SEA.

While it is gratifying to know that the British Columbia sealing fleet has this season made a fairly successful catch, and that its losses from outrages on the part of the United States have on the whole not been very serious, though serious enough in individual cases, it is beyond measure discouraging and mystifying that no steps whatever have been taken—nor is there any present prospect of any being taken—by the government of the British empire to secure redress for the losses already suffered or to prevent recurrence of these outrages in the future. It seems strange that at the very time that the most formidable display of Britain's naval power ever made was being made at home its flag was insulted and its subjects robbed on the high seas within comparatively easy sail of British fleet lying at Esquimaux, sufficiently powerful to destroy the whole navy of the nation committing the outrages. Time was when Britain could not protect its flag and its subjects the wide world over, but until now it never was said truthfully that it would not. There have been times when Britain showed perhaps a too conciliatory spirit, when a policy of peace at any price was acted upon to an extent greater than seemed to accord with the dignity of a powerful empire or even with simple justice, but it remained for a government of alleged jingoes to allow wanton outrages to be perpetrated upon its subjects without even protest. It is now three years since the first outrages on Canadian sealers were committed in Behring's sea, by which a number of Canadians were rendered bankrupt; and a valuable industry in which according to the laws of nations it was entitled to engage in was cut off to some extent from Canada. To this day not a cent of compensation has been secured for these losses, or even demanded so far as the public know. The outrages have been repeated this season and losses again sustained and no more has been done than was in the first instance.

The amount of the losses sustained by Canada and Canadians directly and indirectly in this matter although large enough are not as important as the bearing which the incident has upon the public mind of the country regarding the relations existing between Canada and Britain. Canadians have hitherto been under the impression that as British subjects, while they were liable to all the disadvantages which the name carried with it they were also entitled to all the protection which it could afford. The inaction of the existing British administration regarding the sealing matter gives them to understand that such is not the case—that while they are subject to the disabilities of British subjects they are not entitled to British protection. For the idea cannot be got rid of that had these outrages been perpetrated upon vessels sailing from ports in the island of Great Britain they would have been resented forthwith and that it is only because they were owned in Canada and sailed from Canadian ports that the outrages committed upon them have not been resented. That is that Canadian interests are not entitled to British protection. This is the idea that Lord Salisbury has chosen to implant in the minds of Canadians. It is to be hoped sincerely for the good of both Britain and Canada that it is not correct.

If the British empire is merely the British islands with such colonies or dependencies as it may from time to time be thought well to establish, maintain or abandon, the policy pursued in the Behring sea matter is right. But if it is, as it is generally taken to be, imperial in all its parts, that policy falls very far short of the requirements of the case. There is no doubt that the commercial greatness of Great Britain proper draws its support from the parts of the empire outside the bounds of the island to a greater degree than from the island itself.

The continuance of that greatness depends to a great extent on the continuance of the empire, and its increase on the development of the empire. Canada in its situation, extent, resources, and population is in itself the most important single part of the empire unless, perhaps, India. It forms, besides, the most important link in the chain of communication which binds the empire together around the world. It is generally conceded that Canada remains a part of the empire only so long as its people please. They are more than content, they are proud, to do so as long as they are accorded imperial rights, but argument is not necessary to prove that unless they are accorded such rights the empire's hold on their allegiance will be much loosened. Of course Great Britain, through its investors, has heavy interests in the United States. There are probably many more millions of British capital invested there than in Canada. The possibility of British iron clads being compelled to knock British investments in the United States into smashes is of course something to be avoided. No doubt a greater yearly trade is transacted between Great Britain and the United States than between Great Britain and Canada and a rupture between the two countries would have very serious results. It would appear that Her Majesty's advisers have taken these matters into their serious consideration and have concluded to avoid a rupture with the United States even at a sacrifice of Canadian interests.

Although this is evidently the conclusion arrived at by the government now in power Canadians will be slow to believe that in this particular that government represents the ideas of the majority of the people of Great Britain. That government is in power not on account of the ability of its members or their general policy but merely as a negative to a proposed policy on a similar question, and they need not be taken as representing the will of the people on any point. But in any case the fact that such a policy is possible must cause Canadians to think about their future course. If their country is not to be a part of the Great British empire will they submit to foreign control from any source, or will they prepare for an independent existence? Remembering all the while that those who would have must be prepared to hold.

It is pointed out that Dalton McCarthy's protestant horse seems to have failed him at Calgary. Although pressed to speak on the Jesuit's estate question in Victoria, B. C., during his visit there he declined to do so. It is also pointed out that at the time of Mr. McCarthy's visit to Victoria the premier of the province, who is a supporter of Sir John A. Macdonald and a Roman Catholic, was seeking re-election in that city. Of course the probability that a routine anti-Catholic speech from Mr. McCarthy might influence the election against Mr. Davis had nothing to do with Mr. McCarthy's failure to connect.

The Saskatchewan, of Prince Albert, notes the erection of St. Patrick separate Catholic school district No. 11, and says the total assessable value of property in the district is $1,570, on which the total amount collectable in taxes is $15.70. On the strength of this assessment a teacher is engaged at a salary of $1,000 a year, of which the government pays 75 per cent. As the remaining $250 of salary is very many times greater than the amount that can be raised by taxation there is evidently a swindle somewhere, which the most ardent supporter of separate schools could not defend.

R. J. Clarke was found dead in his seat on the C. P. R. train when near Medicine Hat on his way to the coast. The cause of death is supposed to have been the bursting of a blood vessel. He had been unwell for some time and was on his way to Tacoma for his health. He was born in the County Donegal, Ireland, on July 7th, 1852. He settled first in Quebec and then in Manitoba, of which province he was the first attorney-general.

The Orangemen of Leamington, Ontario, have passed resolutions condemning the Canadian government for not dissolving the Jesuit estates act, and declaring that a proper settling up of our public lands with our kindred of the mother country should be the main business of our government.

The St. Paul Pioneer Press says: "The proposition to close the avenue of the carrying trade which lead through Canada is one that will raise a storm of indignation in Congress and out of it when it real purpose is understood. It will never be approved or even tolerated by our people."
